No Fear of a Panie Now he predictions of a coming panic in business do not seem to be founded upon anything nite than that we had a panic in 1873 when The predictions of a coming panic in totalness ar-fairs do not seem to be founded upon anything more definite than that we had a panic in 1853 when the country seemed to be generally prosperous; the country seems to be generally prosperous now; ergo we ought to have another panic. But people who reason in this stupid way full to remember that the panic of 1873 was largely caused by the contraction of the currency, and that of late we have not had, nor are we soon likely to have any disturbance in the volume of our currency. The rapid increase in our prosperity is due to the fact that everyhody is at work, and that we are producing wealth—solid wealth, not chips and whetatones—with enormous rapidity. When a farmer is piling up granories full of wheat and storehouses full of cutton and weel, produced on his own land, there is nothing to par-ticularly alarm him in the fact. Nor is there any thing in the present astonishing era of natisual pro-duction to alarm the people of the United States in-to the fear that to-norrow the Angel of Panic may come and carry away their wealth as before—Do-come and carry away their wealth as before—Dopecially McLaughlin's "Pon my snewed honah." The beautiful drama, "The Charcoal-Burner," wa the next piece. The characters, as represented Patrick Gray; Poynet Arden, by John Baker: Calch Maggie Delaney carried off the ribbon, in the play. Miss Katic Delancy, as Edith Harrington, acted as prettily as she looked beautiful, and many of the young fellows in the annience would have given > CLEVELLIND, O., Jan. 3.—General Garfield is now doing the proliminary work on his inaugural, and, like everything else he does, he displays his desire to go to the bottom of things. He has begin back in the beginning, and is carefully perusing the inaugurals of all the Presidents from Washington down. These afford a most interesting study in and of themselves, and there are some collateral facts connected with the delivery of each of the early ones that are not very well known to the public in general.—Chicago Trebune.

TP We acknowledge the theft of most of the articles and poetry about Christmas from the Troy Chief of the current week. Say what you please about Sol. Miller, he makes the lest selections of poetry and miscellany of any man in the State, and publishes the nestest looking paper. This week's issue as a Christmas paper is hard to beat.—Topeka Cosmonwealth, Dec. 25.

Let Very few people rememdered last Saturday that it was the auniversary of the battle of New Orleans. The good old Democratic holiday is following its party into oblivion.

Wine Making.

The Legislature, now in session at Topcha, is charged with the duty of making a law to properly enforce the provisions of the Constitutional amendment adopted last fall, which prohibits the monnfacture or sale of intoxicating liquors in Kannas. The light, mild, native wine, now manufactured quite extensively in many portions of the Shite, is beyond question one of the most wholeome ind between the first one sitting, would undoubtedly because intoxicated thereby, and since the amendment, in its general and somewhat indefinite terms, makes no distinction between the liquor which intoxicates by the gill, and that which intoxicates by the gill, and that which intoxicates by the gill, and that which intoxicates by the gill, and in its general and somewhat indefinite forms, makes in distinction between the liquic which intexicates by the gill, and that which intexicates by the gill, and that which intexicates by the gill and that which intexicates by the gill on, the home-made wine, simple and wholesome as it is, comes under the law, and its monotificture in this State is "forever prohibited." While this is a very intemperate measure, it is nevertheless, for the present, at least, the surpreme law of the State, and the State Legislature is bound to take cognizance of the fact, and provide the necessary laws for its general enforcement. But the Legislature is, at the same time, equally bound to recognize the other fact, that the majority of those persons who are engaged in wine-making in this State, have come here, and general to the state of prohibition, passed last fall, is as unquestionably unjust to them. These people have not been induced to come here wholly by common rumor, or unautherized newspaper reports, but the publications of our "State Agricultural Society," which are the official acts of the State, have time-after time, and year after year, set forth the superior advantages of this State as a graye-growing and wine-making country, and have put before the public, in the most attractive light, the great inducements which we were offering to immigrants to come here and unvestitated their much officially published by the State, we have scattered broadcast, not only over our own country, but throughout the civilized world, inviting he vine-yardists of Europe to come over and help us to develop the untold resources of our young State as a wine-producing country. Upon the strength of the fact, and the invititions, thus officially published by us, and scattered abroad, hundreds of men have come here and invested their means in this business, to be now informed by the same authority which invited them here, that their calling is minawful, and
